Saier Family, in memory of Tom and Mary Nee
When I tell people about the La Jolla Symphony and Chorus, I am often asked what our comparable institutions are. And then, after I think for a while about where you can find a community orchestra and chorus of the talent and musicality of the La Jolla Symphony and Chorus, along with an abiding devotion to contemporary music and a central role in the pedagogical mission of a major research university, I shake my head. Time after time, I come up empty.

And every time I have that experience, I give a little nod of thanks to the memory of Tom Nee, who started it all.

Tom served as music director of the La Jolla Symphony and Chorus for more than 30 years, and when we marked his passing a decade ago, we were aware that, without Tom, things were never going to be the same. When Mary—Tom’s wife, musical partner, muse, conscience, and the love of his life—died last month, it felt like a chapter in our history was closed.

In honor of Mary and Tom and all that they have meant, we’ll take a moment in this concert to remember them. Starting the concert with a special performance of Beethoven’s Egmont Overture, which we are adding as a tribute to Mary’s indomitable warrior spirit, we’ll move without a pause to this year’s Nee Commission work, luscina, by Tina Tallon. These paired pieces cover an enormous span of style, historical period, technology and musical intent. They seem very different from each other. But that’s the point! We can embrace the future without giving up the past.

Playing a brand new piece for orchestra and electronics takes nothing away from the foundational works of Beethoven. To the contrary, the newness in Tallon’s work reminds us that, once upon a time, the Beethoven was new and untried, and perhaps even misunderstood. And the Beethoven reminds us that Tallon’s music did not arise from nowhere, but grows from our accumulating history. We’ll note, with pride, that no other orchestra, outside of specialist contemporary ensembles, gives as much programming space to emerging composers, many writing their first orchestra pieces, as does the La Jolla Symphony and Chorus.

And every time, I make a radical programming juxtaposition or program a young composer in her first work for orchestra, I give a small nod to the memory of Tom Nee, who started it all.

This season we celebrate 50 years of affiliation with the University of California, San Diego. Over those years, countless students have sat side-by-side with countless community and professional musicians in our rehearsals and concerts. Undergraduates, concerned about their future lives as physicians, engineers, and other professionals, have seen, through the living examples of our community members, how music can remain a lifelong joy.

And every time I see a young UC San Diego student talking with her stand partner—the local teacher, the world class oceanographer, the cold fusion expert, the radiologist, the retired professor—I give a small nod of thanks to Tom Nee, who started it all.

Tonight we’ll also feature Thomas Adès’s Concentric Paths, a virtuoso concerto for violin and orchestra. This brilliant work will feature Keir Gogwilt, a violinist of exceptional talent and intellect. To my knowledge, this is the first performance of a large-scale work of Adès in San Diego. And it brings to mind all the other works, from the Bernstein Mass, to Xenakis’s Metastasis, to the first work that Tom Nee ever conducted with the La Jolla Symphony and Chorus.

Music Director

Percussionist, conductor, and author Steven Schick was born in Iowa and raised in a farming family. Hailed by Alex Ross in The New Yorker as “one of our supreme living virtuosos, not just of percussion but of any instrument,” he has championed contemporary percussion music by commissioning or premiering more than 150 new works. The most important of these have become core repertory for solo percussion. In 2014 he was inducted into the Percussive Arts Society Hall of Fame.

Schick is in his 11th season as artistic director and conductor of the La Jolla Symphony and Chorus. He is also artistic director of the San Francisco Contemporary Music Players, co-artistic director of the Banff Centre for Arts and Creativity Summer Music Program, and artistic director and conductor of the Breckenridge Music Festival.

As a guest conductor he has appeared with the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra, the Saint Paul Chamber Orchestra, the Milwaukee Symphony, Ensemble Modern, the International Contemporary Ensemble, and the Asko/Schönberg Ensemble.

Schick’s publications include a book, “The Percussionist’s Art: Same Bed, Different Dreams,” and many articles. He has released numerous recordings including the 2010 “Percussion Works of Iannis Xenakis,” and its companion, “The Complete Early Percussion Works of Karlheinz Stockhausen” in 2014 (both on Mode). He received the “Diapason d’Or” as conductor (Xenakis Ensemble Music with ICE) and the Deutscheschallplattenkritikpreis, as percussionist (Stockhausen), each for the best new music release of 2015.

Steven Schick is Distinguished Professor of Music and holds the Reed Family Presidential Chair at the University of California, San Diego.
Egmont Overture, Opus 84
LUDWIG VAN BEETHOVEN
Born December 16, 1770, Bonn
Died March 26, 1827, Vienna

In 1809 Beethoven was invited to contribute incidental music to a revival of Goethe’s tragedy Egmont at the Vienna Burgtheater. The motives of the theater’s managers were clear: the French occupation of Vienna had just ended, and they wanted to celebrate their own freedom with a production of a play that told of resistance to political oppression. Beethoven had found the French occupation very difficult (he had hid in the basement of his brother’s house with a pillow wrapped around his head during the French bombardment), and he was delighted to write the incidental music, which consists of an overture and nine other movements, including songs, entr’actes, a melodrama, and a concluding victory symphony.

But Egmont appealed to Beethoven for reasons deeper than its relevance to the French occupation of his adopted city.

Goethe’s tragedy tells of the heroic resistance to the Spanish occupation of the Netherlands by Count Egmont, who is imprisoned by the evil Duke Alva. When a rescue attempt by Egmont’s lover Clärchen fails, she poisons herself, but Egmont goes to the gallows confident of the ultimate triumph of his cause. The themes of an imprisoned hero, a faithful woman willing to make sacrifices for love and political ideals, and the resistance to tyranny are of course those of Beethoven’s opera Fidelio, and while the endings of Egmont and Fidelio are quite different, Beethoven must have found Goethe’s play close to his own heart.

The complete incidental music is seldom heard today, but the overture has become one of Beethoven’s most famous. It does not, however, attempt to tell the story of the play, and listeners should not search for a musical depiction of events. A powerful slow introduction gives way to a tentative, falling string figure—gradually the strength coiled up in this simple theme-shape is unleashed, and the dramatic overture rushes ahead at the Allegro. This music is full of energy, and at moments Beethoven subtly shifts the pulse of his 3/4 meter to make it feel like 6/8. The ominous chords of the opening return to usher in the brilliant close, where music that will reappear in the Symphony of Victory (the tenth and final movement of the incidental music) symbolizes the ultimate victory of Egmont’s cause.
TINA TALLON
Born January 6, 1990, Baltimore

The following program note has been supplied by the composer.

“luscinia” is the genus portion of the scientific name for the common nightingale, Luscinia megarhynchos. Nightingales are small birds found primarily throughout Europe and Asia, and are known for their highly varied song, which is often sung at night. They have been referenced throughout literature, music, and visual art for centuries, though perhaps one of the nightingale’s most well-known appearances is in the tale of Philomel, found in Ovid’s Metamorphoses. Ovid writes of a young woman who is raped by her brother-in-law, Tereus, who then cuts out her tongue to prevent her from identifying him as the perpetrator. Unable to speak, she weaves a tapestry depicting her assault and sends it to her sister Procne, who hatches a plan to exact revenge. After discovering this plan, Tereus chases Procne and Philomel into the forest, where they escape by being turned into birds—Procne into a swallow, and Philomel into a nightingale. For many artists, the nightingale’s song has often had melancholy connotations, presumably due in some part to Ovid’s story; however, in a somewhat cruelly ironic twist, modern ornithologists have found that it is usually only the male nightingale that actually sings (as is the case with many species of birds).

This piece incorporates live electronic processing, which involves both the generation of new sounds in response to the orchestra and live modification of what the orchestra is playing. This allows for the seamless integration of the acoustic and electronic elements of the piece, and in some cases, they may be indistinguishable. One of the most important aspects of the processing of the orchestra allows for the production of vocal sounds using the spectral profiles of the music that the orchestra is playing. In this way, the orchestra is able to give voice to those who have historically been silenced. In fact, luscinia is, most of all, a meditation on silence (albeit not a peaceful, pastoral one).

Annie Adès composed his Violin Concerto in 2005, shortly after completing his opera The Tempest. The concert had been jointly commissioned by the Berlin Festspiele and the Los Angeles Philharmonic, and violinist Anthony Marwood gave the world premiere in Berlin on September 4, 2005, with the composer conducting. Marwood and Adès were again the principals at the American premiere, given with the Los Angeles Philharmonic in Disney Hall on February 10, 2006. The concerto is scored for an orchestra of almost Mozartean proportions: pairs of woodwinds and trumpets, three horns, trombone, tuba, percussion, and strings.

Adès gave his Violin Concerto the subtitle “Concentric Paths,” and he provided a concise program note, worth quoting in detail:

This concerto has three movements, like most, but it is really more of a triptych, as the middle one is the largest. It is the “slow” movement, built from two large, and very many small, independent cycles, which overlap and clash, sometimes violently, in their motion towards resolution.

The outer movements too are circular in design, the first fast, with sheets of unstable harmony in different orbits, the third playful, at ease, with stable cycles moving in harmony at different rates.

That notes hints at the circularity of this music, of its “concentric paths,” and the three movements have titles—Rings, Paths, and...

Felipe Rossi’s Mutual Magical Hue [an anagram of Guillaume de Machaut]:
Translation of Machaut’s virelai “Je vivroie liement / Liement me deport” for solo soprano, solo violin and chamber orchestra

It is crucial to remember that Guillaume de Machaut comes from a time before the distinction between composer and poet crystallized into the form familiar today. As a poet who set his own texts to music and a composer who established new standards for the art of musical depiction, the figure of Machaut not only bears the seal of an epoch, but also represents a fascinating testimony to the way in which such generic distinctions are often revealed to be artificial when examined closely. Machaut’s oeuvre is a site of constant and recursive translation, and it is this feature of his work to which Mutual Magical Hue primarily responds. This piece offers an environment wherein the musical and the poetic intermingle and inform each other in the personages of its two soloists, one who declaims poetry musically and one who performs music poetically. It is an anagram of the composer’s name. It is a world full of orchestral intricacies and love for fiddles. It is an homage to 14th-century courtly love and a humble attempt to render it legible in the age of Tinder. This piece stands at a considerable remove from the dance music of the troubadour that supplied Machaut with source materials, but it is an attempt to reimagine and reinvigorate them in a way that—hopefully—does justice to the kind of artwork that develops through multiple forms of interaction, from the most unanimous to the most conflictual and estranged.

I should lead a happy life
[translated by F. Rossi]

I should lead a happy life,
sweet creature,
if only you truly realized that you were the cause of all my concern.
Lady of cheerful bearing,
pleasing, bright and pure,
often the woe I suffer
to serve you loyally
makes me say ‘alas!’
And you may be sure that I can in no wise
go on living like this, if it lasts
any longer.
For you are merciless to me
and pitilessly obdurate,
and have put such longing
into my heart
that it will certainly die
a most dismal death,
unless for its relief
your mercy is soon
ready.

The Nee Legacy

Tom and Mary Nee were there from the beginning. When the UC San Diego Music Department was born, Tom was brought in as one of three founding faculty members. The year was 1967, and the new faculty thought it would be a good idea for the department to have an orchestra and a chorus. Within months, an affiliation was formed between the new department and a small amateur orchestra called the La Jolla Civic Orchestra and an informal assemblage of all of the La Jolla church choirs under the direction of Patricia Smith. Tom was named music director of what grew to become the 230-member La Jolla Symphony & Chorus. It was a position he held for 31 years.

A champion of new music, Tom taught the ensemble to be flexible and open to different musical experiences. Mary, a dancer, actor and artist by training, lent her talents and support whenever needed, including art direction of Ravel’s lyric fantasy L’Enfant et les Sortilèges and staging of the Virgil Thompson opera Mother of Us All.

Upon Tom’s retirement in June 1998, the Thomas Nee Commission was established to commemorate his advocacy of contemporary music and young composers. To-date, twenty Thomas Nee Commissions have been awarded to UC San Diego graduate students and premiered on the LJS&C’s subscription concert series.

We dedicate this weekend’s concerts to the memory of Tom (1920-2008) and Mary (1928-2017), and celebrate their legacy with the premiere of the twenty-first Thomas Nee Commission, Iuscinia by Tina Tallon.
Francis Poulenc was raised a Roman Catholic, but very early in life he fell away from the church. Then in the summer of 1935 came one of those life-changing experiences: his close friend, the composer Pierre-Octave Ferroud, was killed in an automobile accident in Hungary. Badly shaken, Poulenc made a pilgrimage to the village of Rocamadour in southern France, where a chapel dedicated to the Black Virgin sits atop a hill. Poulenc himself explained its impact on him: “As I meditated on the fragility of our human frame, I was drawn once more to the life of the spirit. Rocamadour had the effect of restoring me to the faith of my childhood.” Poulenc immediately composed his Vierge noire with a number of other liturgical settings across the remainder of his life.

One of the greatest of these was the result of a commission from the Koussevitzky Foundation in the late 1950s. Their first suggestion that he write a symphony was quickly rebuffed, nor was their follow-up request for a concerto any more appealing to the composer. At that point the Foundation told Poulenc that he of the Mass text. Poulenc did most of the work on what would be the Gloria score that December and the orchestration in July 1960. Poulenc flew to Boston for the premiere, which was delayed a day when that city was incapacitated by a massive snowstorm. The premiere took place on January 20, 1961, by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Adele Addison as soprano soloist. Poulenc was delighted by the performance, and the Gloria has become one of his best-known works. Unfortunately, it was also one of his last: he died two years later at age 64.

Hearing this music without knowing its text, one would hardly guess that it is a setting of a sacred text. Poulenc’s music for the Gloria is neither ceremonial nor solemn nor particularly dignified. On the contrary, at some points it is so lighthearted that it has been accused of frivolity. In response to such criticism, Poulenc said: “The second movement caused a scandal; I wonder why? I was simply thinking, in writing it, of the Gozzoli frescoes in which the angels stick out their tongues; I was thinking also of the famous Benedictines whom I saw playing soccer one day.” This is precisely the charm of the Gloria, which features gorgeous melodies, piquant harmonies (the opening chord, for example), and rhythmic energy. Poulenc’s setting makes clear that he did not feel one need be solemn to praise God.

The Gloria text comes from the second part of the Roman Catholic Mass; Poulenc scores his setting for soprano soloist (who sings in three of the six movements), chorus, and orchestra. The opening Gloria, majestic and slightly dissonant, sets the mood of ebullient praise. The energetic Laudamus te is in ternary form; Poulenc marks its beginning “Very fast and joyous,” and this frames a solemn Gratias. The soprano solo enters at the Domine Deus, her voice floating beautifully above the subdued chorus and orchestra. The bubbling Domine fili unigenite is full of vitality—again, Poulenc instructs that it should be “Very fast and joyous.” The mood changes sharply at the Domine Deus, Agnus Dei, longest and most solemn section of the Gloria, where the soprano’s jagged melodic line soars high above the accompaniment. Spirited entrances by the tenors and mezzo-sopranos open the concluding Qui sedes ad dexteram Patris, which is based partially on themes and rhythms from the opening movement. A strident climax leads to the return of the soprano soloist and a conclusion (“Extraordinarily calm,” specifies Poulenc) that fades into silence on a final Amen.

PLANNED GIVING NEWS

May We Hear From You?

If you have provided for La Jolla Symphony & Chorus in your estate plans, please tell us about it so that we can include you in Planned Giving events and recognize your gift. If not, let us show you how.

Through a bequest you can:

• Provide a future for LJS&C
• Possibly reduce the tax burden on your estate
• Permanently link your name to LJS&C through the Therese Hurst Society for Planned Giving.

For information about planned gifts, contact Diane Salisbury at dsalisbury@laJollasyphony.com or 858-822-3774

Concert Video Educational Fund

Thanks to a generous gift by the Family of Joan Forrest, in her memory, La Jolla Symphony & Chorus has funding to videotape each concert this season. These videos will be posted on our YouTube channel for educators and the public to access free of charge as part of our music education and outreach effort. The videos also will be broadcast by UCSD-TV to all of the UC campuses and by satellite and cable to over 100,000 viewers.

With ongoing support, we can turn LJS&Ch’s unique commitment to performing new music and lesser-known works into an invaluable educational resource through videotaping and archiving of our concerts. If you are interested in joining the Family of Joan Forrest in supporting this effort, please contact Diane Salisbury at dsalisbury@lajollasymphony.com for details.
