Program Notes for Mark Dresser:

 Invocation – An opening solo bass piece that serves as a vehicle to feel the room, the audience, and integrate the areas of my current state of musical exploration.

 Threaded – Originally inspired by the innovative two bow work of cellist Frances-Marie Uitti, I developed a series of pieces that uses the unorthodox technique of unfastening the frog of bow and re-threading it through various string combinations to investigate intervals, triple and even quadruple stops that are beyond traditional playing.

 Butch’s Balm (2018) – Dedicated to memory of jazz pianist, composer, arranger, Butch Lacy. His piano playing embraced the economy, timing, and soulfulness of Wynton Kelly. In the early eighties he was the pianist with the legendary singer, Sarah Vaughn. Soon thereafter he emigrated to Denmark and established himself as a revered teacher and performer/composer. We recorded Being/Playing in Denmark (ILK Music 2016) and performed together this past spring 2017. Learning that he was terminally ill, I composed this piece for him and premiered it with my quintet on March 30 this year and he was able to hear it days before he passed.

 I Can Smell You Listening (for Alexandra Montano) – The day after 9/11 and living in Brooklyn I got together with singer Alexandra Montano and vibraphonist Matt Moran to musically commune. Alexandra who performed with Phillip Glass Ensemble for over a decade was a wonderful improviser whose musicianship, lyricism, and ability to spontaneously invent over complex forms was fantastic. We recorded on Denman Maroney and my, CD Time Changes (2005 Cryptogramophone). She passed away in 2007.

 Black Arthur’s Bounce (2018) – Arthur Blythe, the legendary alto saxophonist hailing from Los Angeles first came to national attention as a member of Horace Tapscott’s Pan Afrikan Peoples Arkestra, and on the the LP, The Giant Has Awakened (1969). Known in those days as “Black Arthur” he was the inspiration of Amiri Baraka’s epic poem, “In the Tradition (for Black Arthur Blythe). His sound is instantly identifiable by the intensity of the attack, wide expressive vibrato and dynamic rhythm. I performed with him in the early 70’s as a member of Stanley Crouch’s “Black Music Infinity.” Once moving to NYC he established himself as a major definitive voice and recording artist. He passed away last year.

 Program Notes for Anthony Davis:

 Goddess Variations (2003) – This piece is based on the Goddess of the Waters Aria in my opera Amistad. The aria portrays the Middle Passage as the bodies of slaves are thrown overboard into the ocean. As they float toward the bottom of the sea, the Goddess sees their premature death as a violation of her body, as the fire of the slaves’ souls is extinguished.

 Wayang Variations (2007) – This solo piano piece is part of my Wayang cycle of compositions that include Wayang II, Wayang IV, Wayang V for Piano and Orchestra, Wayang VI for Two Pianos. The music is inspired by the Balinese gamelan. The opera Under the Double Moon was originally intended to be a science fiction – shadow puppet opera that drew from the Wayang series.

 Lady of the Mirrors (1979) – This piece was composed during a period I was working with dancers in New York. The lady of the mirrors is the dancer warming up in front of a mirror. The piece is based on musical fragments that recur balancing action and silence, energy and stasis.

 Loss – But Death is Never Late (2018) – The piece begins as a ritual, a slow phase of 8 against 9 featuring solo bass. The repeating figure eventually disintegrates into an open improvisation that precedes But Death is Never Late. This music is derived from the ending of the opera Lear on the 2nd Floor.

WEDNESDAY@7 presents
Stephanie Richards: Full Moon

“Envelope-shredding” trumpeter and composer Stephanie Richards joins forces with pioneering live-sampler J.A. Dino Deane for a sonic exploration of supernatural groove. Using both acoustic and electronic instruments, Richards will celebrate and premiere the debut release of Fullmoon on Relative Pitch Records.

Richards has built a compelling presence in the NYC improvised and experimental scenes, from working with masters Anthony Braxton, Henry Threadgill, Laurie Anderson and Yoko Ono, to cutting edge improvisors Jason Moran and Deerhoof’s Greg Saunier. Meeting through a mutual bond with the late improvising pioneer Butch Morris, collaborator Dino J.A. Deane innovated the use of live electronics in the 1980s, working with artists ranging from Jon Hassell to the art punk group Indoor Life.

Inspired by phases of the moon, Richards’ trumpet is encircled by percussion instruments, choreographed to play within and against their resonant surfaces while Deane samples and manipulates sounds in real-time, creating a dialogue for solo trumpet, drums and transformed reflections of themselves.

As a special addition, the engagement will feature a live screening of the short animated film “Gong” by director Aaron Vinton, featuring music from Fullmoon.
