About the Program

String Quartet in E-Flat Major, opus 125, no. 1, D.87
Franz Schubert
Born January 31, 1797, Vienna
Died November 19, 1828, Vienna

Schubert came from a poor but resoundingly musical family. His schoolteacher father was an amateur cellist, and his older brothers Ferdinand and Karl were violinists. Young Franz was himself a violinist, but he preferred to play viola, and one of the family pleasures was playing quartets together. Franz had been sent off to boarding school in 1812, but he would come home for an extended vacation each fall, and during the fall of 1813—when he was 16—Schubert wrote a great deal of music for the family quartet to play. This included dances, minuets, and other brief works, but in November of that year Schubert wrote the Quartet in E-Flat Major, which has remained one of the most popular works of his youth.

Though this quartet is an early work, it shows hints of things to come. Schubert did not choose as his model the high classical quartets of Mozart and Haydn but appears to have been more drawn to the example of Beethoven, then 43 and also living in Vienna. Schubert writes no minuet movement for this quartet, offering a scherzo instead, and this becomes the second movement of the quartet rather than the expected third. Alert listeners may also detect some tentative but unmistakable thematic links between the movements. (The quartet's high opus number, by the way, tells us nothing about its place in the chronology of Schubert's works; the quartet acquired that number when it was published in 1840, thirteen years after Schubert's death. Its number in the Deutsch sequence—87—makes clear its early origin.)

The sonata-form Allegro moderato flows smoothly and serenely, with a soaring duet for violins in octaves occurring within the first moments. The second theme-group, however, dominates much of the development and brings the movement to a close. Schubert marks the scherzo Prestissimo, and it flies along, powered by grace notes and octave drops; a brief trio section leads to the return of the opening material. In the Adagio, the melodic interest is limited largely to the first violin, which arches gracefully over steady accompaniment from the lower voices. The beginning of the finale repeats the theme-shape that opened the quartet, now at a much faster tempo. The movement dances easily on triplet figures, and along the way Schubert introduces a little tune so infectious that it stays in the mind long after the quartet has rushed to its vigorous close.

String Quartet no.2, “Pulses of Light”
Akira Nishimura
Born September 8, 1953, Osaka, Japan

Akira Nishimura’s String Quartet no. 2 “Pulses of Light” was commissioned by Casals Hall Tokyo and written for and given its premiere by the Arditti String Quartet in 1992. The work comprises two parts played without pause, the first part serving as an introduction to the latter.

The thematic ideas implied and prepared in fragments in the first part begin to form a distinctive shape, competing with each other, by the opening section of the second part. The short motif of the opening thus develops into various forms of pulses, changing chaos into order. The hiccup-like rhythm in the latter half of the second part rests on the rhythm structure of the Balinese Kecak, appearing as sudden, dissonant bursts set against a gradually and insistently unfolding backdrop. At the end of the second part appears a retrograde of the opening motif, recalling the first part and thus completing the cycle.

Fiendishly complicated, the work demands of the musicians the use of a variety of techniques in the string players’ arsenal, including pizzicato, percussive martellato sounds and artificial harmonics (sometimes vigorously bowed to magnify their glassiness).

String Quartet in F Major
Maurice Ravel
Born March 7, 1875, Ciboure, Basses-Pyrenees
Died December 28, 1937, Paris

Ravel wrote his only string quartet in 1902–3, while still a student at the Paris Conservatory, and the first performance was given by the Heymann Quartet in Paris on March 5, 1904, two days before the composer’s twenty-ninth birthday. Ravel’s quartet is in many ways similar to the Debussy quartet, written in 1893—there are parallels between the structure, rhythmic shape, and mood of the two works—but Ravel dedicated his quartet “To my dear teacher Gabriel Fauré,” who was directing Ravel’s work at the Conservatory.

One of the most distinctive features of Ravel’s quartet is its cyclic deployment of themes: the first movement's two main themes return in various forms in the other three movements, giving the quartet a tight sense of unity. Some have charged that such repetition precludes sufficient thematic variety, but Ravel subtly modifies the color, harmony, and mood of each reappearance of these themes so that from this unity comes enormous variety.

The first movement is marked Allegro moderato, but Ravel specifies that it should also be Très doux (“Very gentle”). The calm first subject is heard immediately in the first violin over a rising accompaniment in the other voices, and this leads—after some spirited extension—to the haunting second theme, announced by the first violin and viola, two octaves apart. The relatively brief development rises to a huge climax—Ravel marks it triple forte—before the movement subsides to close with its opening theme, now gracefully elongated, fading gently into silence.

The second movement, Assez vif–Très rythmé, is a scherzo in ternary form. The opening is a tour de force of purely pizzicato writing that makes the quartet sound like a massive guitar. Some of this movement’s rhythmic complexity comes from Ravel’s use of multiple meters. The tempo indication is 6/8(3/4), and while the first violin is accented in 3/4 throughout, the other voices are frequently accented in 6/8, with the resulting cross-rhythms giving the music a pleasing vitality. The slow center section is a subtle transformation of the first movement’s second theme. At the conclusion of this section comes one of the quartet’s most brilliant passages, the bridge back to the opening material. Here the pizzicato resumes quietly, gathers speed and force, and races upward to launch the return of the movement’s opening theme. This is wonderful writing for quartet, and the scherzo drives straight to its explosive pizzicato cadence.

The third movement—Très lent—is in free form, and perhaps the best way to understand this movement is to approach it as a rhapsody based loosely on themes from the first movement. Beneath these themes Ravel sets a rhythmic cell of three notes that repeats constantly, but it remains an accompaniment figure rather than becoming an active thematic participant. The movement’s impression of freedom results in no small part from its frequent changes of both key and meter.

After the serene close of the third movement, the fourth—Agité—leaps almost abrasively to life. Agitated it certainly is, an effect that comes from its steadily-driving double-stroked passages, and this mood continues across the span of the movement. The basic metric unit here is the rapid 5/8 heard at the beginning, though Ravel changes meter frequently, with excursions into 3/4 and 5/4. Once again, material from the first movement returns, and after several lyric interludes the finale takes on once again the aggressive mood of its opening and powers its way to the close.

Ravel’s quartet generated a mixed reaction at its premiere in 1904. One of those most critical was the dedicatee, Gabriel Fauré, who was especially bothered by the unorthodox finale, which he thought “stunted, badly balanced, in fact a failure”. But when Ravel, troubled by such criticism, turned to Debussy for his estimation, the latter offered the best possible response: “In the name of the gods of Music and for my sake personally, do not touch a note of what you have written.”
